The moon and stars look down tonight Upon a flower strewn mound, Where ausumn winds their vigil keep Over our darling's long last sleep, Breaking the silence solemn deep. With wierd and sobbing sound.

With folded bands o'er the pu'seless heart While we but mourn and weep,
Calm and sweet is her s'umber dear
Under the mellow star light clear
Trustl and the promise "He give h—hear
To His beloved, sleep."

Kissed by an angel the sweet young lips, And on the face so still Fell from an angel's hand that right Peta's from blosoms snowy white. Pincked in the realiss of eternal light With the whisper, ""Tis God's will."

Dear, though the blow is heavy, Let us humbly kess the rod.
